The historical Hotel Savoy sets the tone of modern hospitality by its originality and elegance, while respecting the local tradition of charming half-timbered buildings.

Something interesting from hotel history...

Savoy Hotel was created at the place of hotel Krone (Crown), which was built in 1881 by Josef Erlebach. At that time, with its 35 rooms it was one of the largest in Spindleruv Mlyn. In 1897 the flood damaged the building and the owner rebuilt it to romantically conceived four-storey hotel with a distinctive half-timbered structures. In 1906, the hotel Krone could boast with centrally heated rooms or with one of the first local phones, with number 7.

In 1922, famous writer Franz Kafka, who was looking for the fresh mountain air to recover, stayed here. And in his hotel room he began to write one of his most famous works, The Castle.

The daughter of Josef Erlebach Elsa married Ernst Teichmann and together in 1924 took over the hotel. Ernst Teichmann worked his way up to most respected hotelier in Spindleruv Mlyn. In 1930 the couple modernized the hotel and removed the dilapidated tower, and in 1936 renamed the hotel to Savoy.

Tourism in the city stopped at the onset of the Second World War, in 1938. During the war, the hotel was used as a hospital for German soldiers.

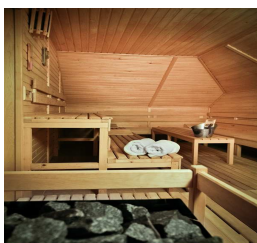

For many decades, even during the socialist era, Savoy Hotel remained the best hotel in Spindleruv Mlyn and retained its traditional charm.
